CIVEY SURVEY

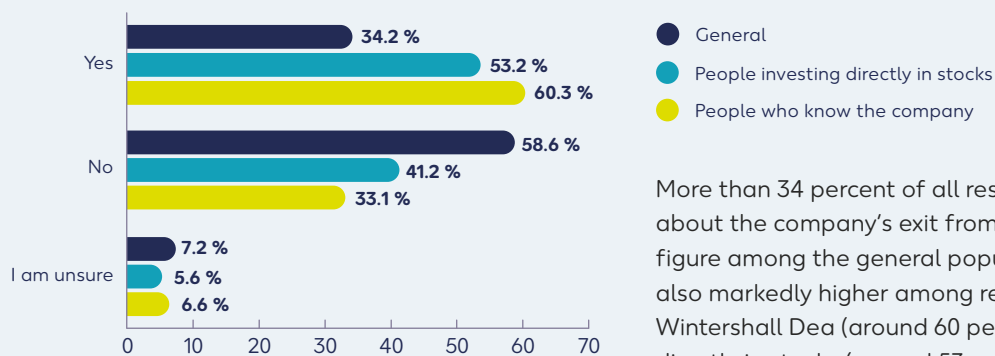

STRONG SUPPORT FOR EXIT FROM RUSSIA

Russia's war of aggression on Ukraine has shaken to the core economic, social and political partnerships between Russia and Europe that have been built up over decades. In January 2023, Wintershall Dea announced that it would end its activities in Russia and exit the country in an orderly manner.

The opinion research institute Civey gauged in a representative survey what Germans think about the exit of Wintershall Dea from Russia. Around 5,000 people aged 18 and over were surveyed nationwide.¹ Roughly half of respondents (45.4 percent) were familiar with Wintershall Dea as a company.

Exit from Russia was widely noticed

Have you heard that the German gas and oil company „Wintershall Dea“ will divest itself of gas production in Russia?

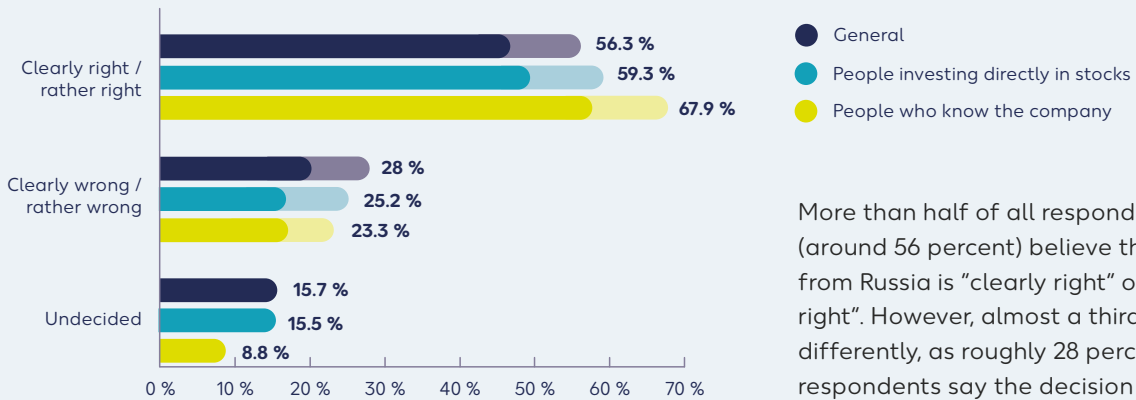

More than 34 percent of all respondents have heard about the company's exit from Russia – a relatively high figure among the general population. This figure was also markedly higher among respondents familiar with Wintershall Dea (around 60 percent) or who invest directly in stocks (around 53 percent) and are therefore more likely to be interested in news regarding the German economy.

¹ Nationwide survey between 13 and 16 January 2023 (before the exit was announced) as well as on 18 and 19 January 2023 (after the exit was announced). In both cases, around 5,000 people aged 18 and over were surveyed.

An absolute majority approves of the exit from Russia

What do you think of German energy companies such as the gas and oil producer „Wintershall Dea“ ending their activities in Russia?

More than half of all respondents (around 56 percent) believe that the exit from Russia is “clearly right” or “rather right”. However, almost a third see things differently, as roughly 28 percent of respondents say the decision is “clearly wrong” or “rather wrong”. The picture is especially clear among respondents familiar with Wintershall Dea: two-thirds of them (68 percent) consider the company’s decision to be correct. And almost 60 percent of individuals who directly invest in stocks approve of the decision.
